Inveraray Castle, a residence of the Duke of Argyll, stands on the level ground at the mouth of the Aray, close to the shores of the Bay. The original structure has been somewhat altered in design by the restoration after the partial destruction by fire in 1877. Duniquaich (Fortress of the Cup) is a beautiful little wooded hill, 900 feet high, overlooking the shores of Loch Fyne.

Inveraray Castle, a seat of the Duke of Argyll, stands on the level ground at the mouth of the Aray, close to the shores of the Loch. The original fortalice has been almost entirely altered in design by the restoration of the present destruction by fire in 1877. Dominating Inveraray is the Cruic, a beautiful little wooded hill, and just below, overlooking the shores of Loch Fyne.

I hope you are better darling.
